Highlights from Opening Ceremony

In -depth statistics and studies indicate that aquaculture is the fastest growing food sector worldwide. The inputs and outputs are easily controlled and verified. Information, systems, equipment and qualified human resources are abundantly available. More importantly, increased demand and high consumption of seafood is the main driving force behind the rapid development of the sector. Additionally, improved dietary habits and adopting healthy lifestyle have driven governments to embrace good aquaculture practices and development to bridge the gap between supply and demand. fully aware of the importance of fisheries development, Saudi Arabia has established National Fisheries Development Program (NFDP) with a view to achieving sustainable development of this vital industry and implemented a number of initiatives to motivate and increase private investments.

Aquaculture in particular has been the fastest growing food production system worldwide over the past five decades. In just few years, The sector has made significant achievements due to huge investments injected by many countries around the world to support and boost this industry. FAO will continue to advance these developments.

Saudi Arabia' output accounted for 94% percent of the GCC's total production of aquaculture products. a production that has grown considerably in recent years.
